Russian Railways (RZD) are organising the fourth Next Station international conference in cooperation with the International Union of Railways (UIC). The first three events took place in Rome (2005), Paris (2007) and Brussels (2011) and met with worldwide success.

For the first time, the international conference is being held directly at a railway station. Kazansky Station is a center of one of the largest transportation hubs in Moscow; it is located in the center of the city and connected to two other stations and two metro lines.

Next Station is a worldwide meeting place for decision makers from governments, international organizations and the transport world, railway undertakings, station managers, local authorities, service providers, manufacturers, architects, urban developers, research agencies, etc. In a word, anyone who has anything at all to do with stations to review all strategic issues related to the development and operation of railway stations.

It provides the perfect opportunity to exchange new development trends within the sphere of railway stations and obtain knowledge about contemporary themes such as stations of the future, opening up stations to new operators, new developments in the realm of service and intermodality, urban-planning development in station areas and economic models for stations and sustainability.

We look forward to meeting you on October, 16, 17 and 18, in Moscow.

Vladimir Yakunin

*President of Russian Railways (RZD)
Chairman of the International Union of Railways (UIC)*

The venue

For the first time, this leading international event is being held directly at a railway station. Kazansky Station illustrates the large scope of functions of an important railway station in an extensive city such as Moscow and a large country such as Russia.

Kazansky Station is one of the most important stations considering the passenger traffic records in the Russian mega-city serving the Southern, South-Eastern and Eastern lines. It is also a magnificent piece of architecture and historic heritage of Russian Railways. Construction of the modern Kazansky Station building started in 1913 under the well-known Russian architect A. Schusev.

In the 1950s Kazansky Station became the first intermodal hub in Moscow as it was connected to Komsomolskaya underground station. At present, the transport hub also includes Leningradsky and Yaroslavsky stations situated on the opposite side of Komsomolskaya square. The current building and the part in which Next Station 2013 will be held is considered to be an architectural monument and is protected by the Moscow Heritage Committee.

Trade Exhibition

This is an excellent opportunity to demonstrate your products and services to high level decision makers.

The trade exhibition is taking place in the main hall of Kazansky Station, alongside all the rooms where the opening ceremony, the parallel sessions and the closing session are being held. The surface area of the existing station is being used for the conference, making the most of the station space. The waiting area of the station will be totally dedicated to the exhibition and coffee breaks.

Officials will be inaugurating the exhibition on 17 October, at 10:30.

Opening hours of the trade exhibition

17 October 2013: 09:00 – 19:00
